

Welcome One if by land, two if by the North End

Walking through the North End is like taking a step back in time. The narrow, winding streets, the cobblestones, all that Italian – it's the closest you can get to going to Italy without actually leaving the country. Luckily, the food lives up to the appearance of the neighborhood, which means that after a day waiting in these long lines outside restaurants, you don't look too unhappy about it. There's more history per square inch than almost anywhere, particularly if you include the nearby Faneuil Hall neighborhood. Just follow my advice on which spots to hit and you'll be set, and you'll have lots of neighborhoods to cover in no time, unlike those poor Italians. That's right: Paul Bunyan level right there. And if you didn't know that already, then you could really use this guide.

—SARA MAYER PEAK

Boxer Statue Who's to blame? When you walk down you to the North End.

North End problem solved: Where to dine

The North End gets so much foot traffic from tourists that choosing a restaurant can be a stressful endeavor. But tucked within Boston's Little Italy is a bevy of great eateries, some of which get overlooked by the big-hitters that get mentions in the travel guides. Here's some of the lesser-known, but even more awesome spots to mangia italiana in the North End. —MEGAN JOHNSON

METRO DISCOVER THE NORTH END/FANEUIL HALL 2014 D3

While the pizza may be tossed in the air for your benefit at Antico Forno, they haven't hit a purse yet that we know of. —SARA MAYER PEAK

Antico Forno

89 Salem St., 617-229-9264. It's the pasta and pizza served by a stone-faced waitress is your thing: head to Salem Street's legendary Antico Forno. The beloved restaurant serves gnocchi that will knock your socks off at a reasonable price (that is, after the cover peacock). If you're looking to really earn your bill, head in for lunch with a friend and split a pizza, which goes for around $25.

Pauli's North End

81 Salem St., 617-226-2794

For hearty sandwiches and salads on the go, head to this Salem Street shop on your lunch break. You'll feel really daring, taste like continental U.S.S. Lobster-

Man Roll, or 80-second sandwiches known as the biggest lobster roll in New England. A friendly staff (including Pauli, who's worked in the neighborhood since he was 8 years old) are always on deck to chat.

Galleria Umberto

269 Hanover St., 617-229-2799. It's a no-frills eatery at this Hanover Street hotspot, which sells Sicilian-style pizza for under $2 a slice. We hear Johnny Depp was a fan, or maybe it's just because it's Italy.

Buza flick "Black Mass" in the hood. Just make sure you don't head over late in the afternoon, as the Galleria shuts down once they run out of pizza. And judging by their loyal line, that's quite often.

Mare Oyster Bar

135 Richmond St.,

617-229-2223

Fresh oysters (the name of the game at this sister restaurant), which serves up scrumptious oysters and clams with an Italian twist. Classic Italian seafood dishes like linguine with clams get a seat next to fresh filets of salmon or halibut, making you believe it's the best of the seven. Fishes all 25 days a year.

You may also get the benefit of a little live music with your meal at Madam's. —SARA MAYER PEAK

Modern Pastry

257 Hanover St., 617-229-2793

Everyone knows the famous Milly's Pastry across the street, which draws a line so serious it wraps around the corner on weekends. But locals in the know look to the Modern as their spot for classic, rustic cannoli, not to mention chocolate gaufre and tarts. The legendary location recently expanded into much larger digs next door, allowing their pastry domination to reach even greater heights. Try the chocolate-covered docto cannoli, which you can order by the box. Yeah, you'll want more than one.

5